DO you think an FPS requires a dose of penicillin or MMOG is a product of dirty hospitals? Then here is your guide to gaming lingo

Wii Nintendo's latest console, pronounced "wee", which hits the shops on December 8. It's perfectly OK to say: "I'm going to have a Wii this Christmas."

PS3
Sony's delay-plagued nextgeneration console now scheduled to launch in the UK in March. Like Wembley, the PS3 will hopefully be worth the wait.

Microsoft's next-generation console. It can be yours for £279.99. X-citing!

(First Person Shooter)
A game viewed through the eyes of the lead character. Usually involves shooting opponents.

RPG (Role Playing Game)
You play as a fearless soldier or a crazed robot, perhaps, embarking on an exciting adventure. You may hear your mates say: "Since I bought this, I haven't had an RPG (Real Proper Girlfriend)."

MMOG

MMOG (Massive Multiplayer Online Game) A game you play against a huge number of other internet players worldwide in the same game. You could spend the next three years playing one of these.

(Real Time Strategy)
A war game that takes place in real-time in which the player spends several months resource gathering and base-building before being wiped out by the Mongolian army.

MMORPG

MMORPG (Massively Multiplayer Online Role-Playing Game)
A popular type of MMOG in which thousands of players take on the guises of elves, goblins and wizards and batter for experience points in a fantasy universe. Get involved in these games and you'll not see daylight for weeks.

Gamertag
The nickname gamers give themselves so that they can be identified online. These are often quite odd, such as Ninja Cyclops, BobZilla and SquirrelOnDrugs.

MMOFPS

(Massive Multiplayer Online First Person Shooter)
A rare type of MMOG that combines first-person shooter gameplay with a large number of players over the Internet.

An insulting term to describe a new or inexperienced played in an MMOG. "This noob doesn't know his Azeroth from his elbow.

COMPUTER games are just for teenagers and geeky guys, right? Wrong. It turns out that nearly half of all gamers are female. Yes, 45% of players are girls – and, as you can see, they're far from erdy.

Here, we meet three self-confessed female gaming addicts who just can't leave their joysticks alone.

CHARLOTTE WHITELOCK

CHARLOTTE WHITELOCK

A 24-year-old publicist from South London. She says:

"SOME of my friends think it's a bit strange. Most of them are quite girly and don't see the attraction. But I can be girly, too. I'm not a geek.

"I had older brothers, so was always surrounded by games instead of dolls. When I was eight, my parents got me the original Nintendo and I never looked back.

"I've always done karate for a hobby, so it's the fighting games I love. I like to think I can really kick ass! At the moment, I'm into Soul Calibur 2 and Streetfighter 2.

"I work in the city and even though I spend most of my time staring at a screen, I usually play at weekends. Gaming's a great way to switch off. You can lose yourself.

"The games are getting harder, though, and sometimes I get really frustrated.

"What I really don't like are the ones that take months to complete. I just don't have the patience."

WMAI next for consoles? Will there be a PS4? An Xbox361? Will a Nintendo Pu follow the Nintendo Wii? PAUL VALE looks into his crystal ball...

crystal ball...

BACK in 1995, when Sony launched the PlayStation we were amazed at the stunning graphics and great sound the new 32-bit system delivered.

In the modern era of HD and surround-sound technology even the PS2 looks nothing more than a toy. And future generations of gamers will look back at our antiquated Xbox 360s and PS3s and wonder how we ever managed.

While experts predict the long-term future of gaming will be "immersive holodecks that stimulate all the senses" there are amazing advances in the industry that you should be able to get your hands on in the next few years.

The current shift towards making the console the focus of a room's media also points to a future in which content, whether that's games, TV, films, music, the internet or phone calls, will all come via a high-speed connection plugged into a single box.

SPACE-AGE GAMING

This will inevitably lead to a revolution in the way games are bought. As music downloads will soon outstrip disc sales, so games will be downloaded rather than physically bought.

will be downloaded rather than physically bought.
Current broadband speeds dictate that large games require a DVD disc – but this will not be the case for long.
The popularity of Xbox Live Arcade proves that gamers are open to downloading games. With both the PS3 and Nintendo Wii set to offer a similar on-line back catalogues, it is only a matter of time before this becomes the norm.

Microsoft is already planning to offer HD video on demand via the Xbox 380 as and when broadband technology allows. There is already speculation that the PS4, loosely scheduled for release in 2011, will not have a disc drive, with all content reaching the consumer via online markets.

Meanwhile, Microsoft expects the Xbox 380 to remain hot until at least 2010. By then, digital distribution should be the norm, sounding the death knell for those piles of dusty discs and boxes.

After that it'll be a few years until the "immersive holodecks".

EMMERDALE: ITV1, 7pm

TO WATCH TODAY

PADDY has a major crisis of confidence in tonight's hourlong EMMERDALE (ITV1, 7pm).
Jo hasn't got around to confessing her responsibility for the blood sample cock-up that cost Andy one of his sheep, so Paddy's come to the conclusion he's losing the plot.
Jo feels a bit bad about this.
"Look, you're a good vet and people rely on you," she guiltily insists.

people rely on you, insists. "Yeah," Paddy replies, "they'll Tean, raday remains learn."

To underline just how dramatically his self-esteem has crumbled, he then tells her to arrange for a locum to replace him. "I'm becoming a liability," he goes.

"I don't see why animals should suffer just because the local vet's become a waste of space."

ELSEWHERE in Soapland, EASTENDERS' Ian and his Auntie Pauline seem to be having some kind of competition tonight (BBC1, 7.30pm) to see which of them can come up with the sickest plot. But rather than try to outscore one another, the Witch and the Weasel unite in a dark conspiracy of evil lies.

Ian reveals how he's planning to humiliate Jane in revenge for her affair with Grunt by standing her up on their so-called wedding day. But Pauline reckons this would be letting her off the hook.

"Humiliation's too good for her," she snarls. "She needs to be punished."
So she suggests lan turn up and announce, exactly what Jane did. "You want to see her suffer, don't you?" she tells him.
Later, a worried lan quizzes Pauline about her health after Joe's happened to mention she's not well. And this time it's Pauline's turn to demonstrate just how warped she can be. Insisting she can't let Sonia ruin her Lanky Moron's life, she admits: "I told them I've got a brain tumour."

tumour."
Then she confesses: "I lied."

...ON LAST NIGHT'S T

IF YOU'RE in need of a hip replacement, you don't call up a plumber. Mainly that's because, if you did, he wouldn't turn up because, if you did, he wouldn't turn up anyway.

But it's also about horses for courses - a lesson that CORONATION STREET (ITVI) seems to have forgotten at the moment. As last night's double dose of the northern drama unfolded, we learnt that Cilla, the woman so orange she's often mistaken for a sack of satsumas, hasn't been having an affair after all.
To be fair, there can't have been anyone in the show's massive, loyal audience who did really think Cilla (Wendi Peters) was having an affair. But the revelation that she had skin cancer from all her years on the sunbed was still a good surprise. To make matters more tangled, husband Les (Bruce Jones) and her best friend Yana (Jayne Tunnicliffe) decided she'd betrayed them and, unaware of the truth behind cilla's mysterious mood-swings, paid her back by getting entangled on the sofa.

It was the sort of tragic plot of which William Shakespeare would have been proud of. There's really only one problem with the Les and Cilla plot. It involves Les and Cilla.

Everything about these two characters – from the way Les shouts instead of speaks, to Cilla's space-hopper coloured tan, marks them out as the Street's jokers. They aren't, incidentally, very funny – but the main and most important thing they aren't, is a pair of well-drawn characters whom we believe in and care about.

To have Les and Cilla playing out such a serious and harrowing story is like doing 'Othello' with Kermit and Miss Piggy. But it does, sadly, makes sense in terms of the increasingly daft direction in which the show seems to be heading.

Storylines, such as Jamie falling for his stepmum, are beginning to be beyond the stepmum, are beginning to be beyond the believable. As Christmas draws near, some of that massive, loyal audience are getting tired of the pantomime, and wishing the Street would return to its senses.

Mum's a real pain

SINCE my mum broke up with her long-term partner, she's become a thorn in my side. She keeps wanting to thorn in my side.

She keeps wanting to come out with me and my mates and it's embarrassing.

She's still very glamorous - tall, blonde and busty and wears fashionable clothes - but she's also very loud and opinionated.

She acts like "one of the girls" and regularly gets off with young men in front of us.

I can tell my friends are getting fed up with it, even though no one's said anything yet.

The other night she caught me going through my diary and asked: "So, what's lined up for Christmas then?"

T've got 10 nights out planned, but I don't want her at any one of them with do I do?

want her at any one of them. What do I do?

JANE SAYS: The problem is that if you continue to allow you

JANE SAYS: Ine problem is that if you continue to allow your mother to go out with you, then you won't have any friends left. One by one, they'll drift away until it's only you and her left downing sad shandies in the disco.

She's got to be encouraged to mix with people of her own age and to leave you alone to be yourself. Is there not an aunt or friend of your mother's that you could speak to? Perhaps if a third party were to suggest to her that she gives you space and creates her own social life, then it'll come as less of a blow.

Or you'll just have to

Or you'll just have to be more secretive and find excuses for why she can't come out with you and hope that she gets the hint.

HE'S REFUSING TO ANSWER MY CALLS

WHEN my brother-in-law told me and my husband about a great money-making scheme he was involved with, we asked him to cut us in.

He came round, all suited and booted, and explained that if we invested £5,000, then we'd make another £3,000 in a year.

make another £3,000 in a year.
We were impressed and handed over the cash.
A couple of months later he came back. He was driving a smart Merc and excitedly told us about an additional policy we could take out, which would earn us even more profit.
We quickly arranged to let him have £10,000 more and he told us we wouldn't regret it. Then I heard from my mother that my sister and this brother-in-law had split.

Stress

Apparently the break was extremely acrimonious with her accusing him of sleeping with other women and re-mortgaging their home behind her back.

I began to start worrying. I rang my brother-in-law who assured me that everything was fine.

He said that he never allowed his personal life to interfere with his professional one and that we had nothing to fear. Our money was not only safe, but it was working even harder for us than he'd imagined and we'd be looking forward to a healthy return "very soon".

Well it's now been 18 months and we've still not seen a penny. My husband and I keep ringing this conman, but he's stopped taking our calls.

The last thing we heard was that he was too busy with his divorce to speak to us.

My sister says that we were speak to us. My sister

My sister says that we were mugs to trust him in the first place. She reckons that he's always been crooked. The only person who does ring us is his mother, who keeps begging us not to make trouble for him. She insists that he's a good boy, who will make everything all right in the end if we just hold our nerve. I believe that she's using emotional blackmail on us.

But she often cries when she rings and says she's old and he's the only person she's got.

I just feel sick with stress.

JANE SAYS: It's very sad that this poor old lady is worried about her son, but you can't allow her to get to you.

What about your money?
The chances are that she's as manipulative and crafty as he is—where do you think he learned it from? He's probably getting her to call on his behalf.

Unfortunately you can't rule being too reasonable and too nice. You're allowing your ex brother-in-law and his mother to control you and that's got to stop. You have no alternative but to contact the police. If this man has £15,000 of your money and is refusing to give it back, then a crime has been committed. I understand that you might be feeling embarrassed by this, but I very much doubt if you'll be his only victims.

Nastv texts are so hurtful

MY ex-boyfriend keeps getting his colleagues to send me nasty texts from their office. He denies this, of ne defines this, of course.

But every day at about 4pm – when they're still sozzled from lunchtime, but bored with work – the insults start arriving on my phone.

They tell me that I'm an 'ugly tart'', that I'm 'frigid in bed' and have "a fat arse".

Some have even been worse than that, but I'm too embarrassed to repeat them.
Obviously my ex

I'm too embarrassed to repeat them. Obviously my ex thinks this is a really funny thing to do. But it's very upsetting, especially as he was the one who dumped me and he knows that I'm still having trouble getting over him. Why would he want to hurt and humiliate me like this?

JANE SAYS: This is your twisted ex's idea of a joke. He's getting a kick out of insulting someone he knows is feeling vulnerable and raw. What a pig. He's nothing more than a bully and a coward. By getting his colleagues to harass you, he's playing the big "I am". You must start fighting back. JANE SAYS: This is

You must start fighting back.
Make a note of all the numbers you've been insulted by so far and tell your exboyfriend that you intend to hand them all over to the police.
This is harassment and you must he had

Having sex after baby

Write to JUST JANE, Daily Star, 10 Lower Thames Street, London EC3R 6EN or email jane.gorman@dailystar.co.uk

She's cheating with my frien

I WAS devastated when I came home and found my girlfriend and best mate having sex on our sofa. I banned him from the house and she vowed it would never happen again. But last week I found a fag end and ash in the bin – I don't smoke, he does. My girl reckons it was the gasman's.

Then I discovered his wallet under the chair.
She's adamant that he must have left it on his last visit.
But there's £60 and a clutch of credit cards inside.

JANE SAYS: This all sounds deeply suspicious. Clearly your ex-mate has been in your house again. He's dropped his wallet during a recent romp and your girlfriend is covering up for him.

As for a gasman smoking in a customer's house? Please, don't let her insult your intelligence. You've got to get to the bottom of this and find out what's going on while you're at work. Perhaps a few unannounced early finishes or unscheduled lunches at home would do the trick. Then you've got to decide where you stand.
